AI Analysis

Jenny's recovery capital assessment reveals a developing foundation with notable strengths in community connection and physical health, scoring 70/112 (63%). Her strongest domain is Cultural Capital at 71%, showing good resource access and neighborhood safety, while Physical Capital at 57% presents the greatest growth opportunity. Despite facing challenges with family dynamics and housing stability, Jenny demonstrates remarkable resilience through her strong sense of recovery community belonging and excellent physical health.

Recovery Strengths

- ' Strong Recovery Community Connection — Jenny strongly agrees she feels part of a recovery community, indicating valuable peer support networks that research shows are critical for sustained recovery and reduced relapse risk
- ' Excellent Physical Health Foundation — Her strong agreement about feeling physically healthy most days provides a crucial foundation for recovery, as physical wellness supports mental clarity and emotional stability needed for recovery work
- ' Reliable Technology Access — Having reliable phone and internet access ensures Jenny can maintain connections with support systems, access telehealth services, and utilize digital recovery tools when needed

Growth Opportunities

- !' Family Relationship Healing — While Jenny has some family support, she indicates family members make recovery more difficult, suggesting an opportunity to work on family communication and boundary-setting skills
- !' Housing Stability Enhancement — Jenny's housing situation is both unstable and unhelpful for recovery, presenting a critical opportunity to explore housing resources and advocacy support
- !' Healthcare Access Improvement — The inability to afford needed health, mental health, and recovery care creates barriers that peer support can help address through resource navigation and advocacy

Recommended Goals

1. Strengthen Recovery Peer Network

Build meaningful friendships within the recovery community and develop skills for supporting other peers in recovery.

Action Steps:

1. Attend weekly peer support meetings or recovery community events to meet potential recovery friends
2. Practice one small act of peer support each week, such as checking in on someone or sharing encouragement
3. Explore volunteer opportunities within recovery organizations to build purpose-driven connections

2. Secure Stable Recovery-Supportive Housing

Work with peer support and case management to identify and access stable housing that supports rather than hinders recovery efforts.

Action Steps:

1. Meet with peer support specialist to explore local recovery housing options and application processes
2. Connect with housing advocacy services to understand tenant rights and available assistance programs
3. Develop a housing stability plan that includes emergency contacts and backup options

3. Rediscover Life Purpose and Meaning

Explore personal values, interests, and goals to rebuild a sense of purpose and meaning beyond recovery maintenance.

Action Steps:

1. Complete a values clarification exercise with peer support to identify what matters most
2. Explore meaningful activities or volunteer work that align with personal values and interests
3. Set one small weekly goal that contributes to a larger sense of purpose and track progress

This Week's Challenge

Reach out to one person in your recovery community this week - whether it's checking in on someone, offering encouragement, or simply sharing how you're doing. Start small with a text, call, or conversation after a meeting.

Jenny, your strong connection to the recovery community and excellent physical health show incredible resilience and wisdom in building your recovery foundation. The fact that you feel part of a recovery community while maintaining your physical wellness demonstrates your commitment to growth and healing. These strengths will serve as powerful anchors as you work on the areas that need attention.
